All Want Recruits. The marine corps and the naval service are both on the market for recruits, offering many advantages and inducements to young men for enlistment. To enter the navy, in the ranks, does not require congressional influence nor the foundations of an academic education. A good physique, good character and a common school education are all that is asked. If the applicant is a likely looking subject to the trained and appraising eye of the recruiting officer, deficiencies of education may be passed over, to be supplied later.

The youngsters who enter the naval service are promised training in all the best schools of mental and physical training, and if they desire, special training in some mechanical branch. They may become electricians, engineers, machinists, or fit themselves for a variety of mechanical industries, while they are paid, clothed and fed. They are taught obedience and respect for authority, and consideration for others, and utter fearlessness.

Has Greater Appeal.
The marine corps appears to appeal to the more adventurous spirit of the youth, as it has a glamor of romance and battle. That is a good thing; service in the corps either gives a young man "his full" of adventure, or tames his over-wild spirit to a degree to make him a better associate for the rest of mankind.

To get back to the question asked at the outset, the only satisfactory answer which the propounders see is the suggestion that the money-making spirit of the inflated period during and after the war has fired the young men with a greater zeal

DENVER NEWSPAPER IS WRECKED BY RIOTERS

Denver, Col., Aug. 6.—One man was killed and between 30 and 35 persons, including Chief of Police Hamilton Armstrong, and eight or 10 other policemen, were injured, several seriously, in rioting between striking street car men and their sympathizers and strike breakers here last night. Five street cars have been wrecked and the plant of the Denver Post damaged by the crowd. The dead man has not been identified. The Post has opposed the strike.

At 8 o'clock the crowd began gathering in front of the Post. Nearly all the windows in the three-story building, and in a new one being built next door, were broken. When the rioting started, a flag hoisted on an American flagpole over the building, the rioting subsided slightly but was renewed a few minutes later with greater vigor. The mob then entered the building. Hammers and spikes were thrown into the linotype machines, paper rolls were moved into the streets, water was poured on the press and the presses were damaged by hammers. Shots were fired several times during the trouble and a number of persons were wounded. Others were injured by being struck by flying missiles. No accurate account of the injuries was obtainable.
